PANQUITCH, SOUTHERN UTAH, Oct. 8, 1872. nent, as the Arabs would say, from the clarion of the rising sun to the latest vaiting only like an impetuous youth, to be called nto play; and when looking at grand near and ey Smith should call the country "only a kind of leatthy grave." Through days set in blue and fold most marvellous we have journeyed in the south of Utah for the past ten days—blue of the sloudless heavens and gold of the suddenly changed ing aspa" of the country. Pine and aspens preore hues giving a funereal air to yawning canyons bre dues giving a funereal air to yawning canyons already sufficiently gloomy, and looking on distant white and red hills, like masses of black rock or lose clinging shrub—the aspen, with white trunk and giancing leaf, adding a light, joyous element to the scene, which approaches the gorgeous and wonderful, when as now acres and acres of the arborescent lava into the valleys, the white trunk nining in contrast like polished silver. RETURNING TO SALT LAKE

rom his astronomical trip to Cheyenne, spending a and Parley's Park, including famous silver mines, and lying a few days in rendezvous camp at surveyed mountains on the south with a small party and train of seventeen pack mules and like, as before, and sweeping down the territory in Thirty miles south of Beaver, in its own valley, lies ormon towns that we have yet seen, lying on a beautiful elevated site at the month of Centre Creek Canyon, on the cast side of the valley. With many substantial stone and wood several-storied houses, many double rows of arch-ing trees along the streets, and a general air of tidiness in its internal economy, it gave us a pleas-ing surprise as we rode into it on a still Sunday , our bell mare and pack train making un seemly hubbub in its religious streets, and showed a marked contrast with such squat, mud-built settlements as Gunnison, Sciplo and other towns of the Many-Wives.

through the canyon, baffled in an attempt to scale through the canyon, ballled in an attempt to scale the main ridge a dozen miles from town by an almost perpendicular Indian trail and a stubborn, heavily-laden pack train, the Lieutenant kept a southerly course over the line of loot hills on the west of the main ridge. Foot hills in name, but mostly 9,000 and 10,000 leet above the sea, reft with deep and difficult canyons, which lead out of the main ridge into the valley, and up and down which we had to make our own trail, indianwise. Up and down them, then, we went, coming out upon box canyons, with perpendicular, tantalizingly close walls, just iar enough apart to prevent passage, crossing a half dozen such in one day, with much intigue to the mules, finding, as we swept southward, a more open country, of vast rolling, grazing fields, where thousands of cattle and sheep were pasturing, and of a sudden, as we mounted the crest of a hill, gathering in one vast view the whole wild scenery about the head-waters of the Colorado, waving in long swell on the southeastern horizon. We were in sight of some of the grandest and carbine shots failed to guide to camp (but who came in late next morning, after a cold and sleepless watch), I sat long on a prominent peak with a topographer, enjoying the novel grandeur of the western of twin peaks, above the main source of the Selvier. Below us, on the south, we looked down upon a vast mountain system, spread out the same of the cold of the severe. the main ridge a dozen miles from town by an al-

view. We were 10,000 feet above the sea, on the western of twin peaks, above the main source of the Sevier. Below us, on the south, we looked down upon a vast mountain system, spread out on a plane several thousand feet lower than the country north of us. The whole region south seemed to have sunk in some Titanic convulsion of nature, or the region on the north to have been erected by some volcanic force, whose marks were plain and irequent in THOUSANDS OF ACRES OF LAVA BOCK; here, in the shape of enormous hills and ridges composed entirely of the black, infernal-looking rock; there, in the middle of wooded and grassy valleys, plied in rough, irregular masses, like the sing from a blast furnace, and with a characteristic clink when struck by the hoof of a mule, for over one of these valley a posits or eruptions we were obliged unwilling unless, with cut feet and legs, when we were hopelessly hemmed in by its diabolic blackness. In this lower country, spread out like a map seen with bird's-eye clearness, were the white walled canyons of two branches of the Virgin, winding distinct for miles towards the horizon; further off were the broken ends of the uplifted sedementary deposits, once at the bottom of an ocean, and now standing exposed high in air, with abrupt edges and plateau-like summits, while the blue rim of the Colorado mesa bounded the wild scene. Domes, pinnacles and grotesqueness in every form, wrought by the patient artist Time, rose in every direction from the sides of canyons, out of the middle of isolated plateaus and on the distant Virgin Mountains; everywhere a strange moulding of the materials of nature into weird-

Wirgin Mountains; everywhere a strange moulding of the materials of nature into weirdness and majesty. At the confluence of the north and south forks of the Virgin stood a Wonderful Pile of Rocks?

In perfect vaisemblance of a Rhenish castle, with sheer white walls, appagently as smooth as art could make them, many outlying walls, inclined at defensive angles to each other, enclosing the main fortress, which rose from the centre of the pile precipitous of great height, with red stained walls, even surmounted by a watch tower—tie whole covered on the very summits, fortress and outlying works, with a short growth of pines, in striking resemblance to men—and as we looked and the soit air blew from the south to us it was easy to glide into the imagination of some vast moated castle, drifting down from chivalric days and standing, with its legions of defenders on its walls, to guard the fair Virgin River at its feet. Turning from the deceptive picture, and regretting rather that the knightly days were dead, when each fancy might be a reality, another picturesque scene was far below us a thousand feet. On the north our pack train, with the lieutenant and orderly in advance and escort in the rear, winding in Indian file along the pebby beach of

A LOVELY ENGLOSED LAKE, TWO MILES LONG, of variously colored water, sparkling in the noonday sun, and the sound of the bell-mare's bell came to us soft and distinct as the train rounded the head of the lake and skirted a dark wall of lava. We were searching the sources of the Sevier. Flunging through primeval woods and stepping cautiously over incisive lava, we came unexpectedly, in an open glade, upon a seagreen stream, bursting from a hillside, twenty feet broad at its lessue, and pouring a mighty food of water down inrough the valley. Five miles above was the lake: strats of lava intervened, and below thousands of feet, was this gigantic spring; the inference was ready that the lake was the source of heaven where the ready in the sunder of high the sunder of the morning on and the massacre continued until the entire party was destroyed. As was to be expected, the survivors of the tribe retailated on the city, and with such affect that it stands now deserted, waiting for quieter times hefore following the example of Panguitch and taking to itself the spreading familiared formulation.

It is reported that the lean required from the people for the retirement of the paper money has failed, and the government will change a portion of the import duties from specie to paper. At Cape Hayti there is a crisis in the money market. Some notes are utterly refused by the public. The government is not yet ready to retire them, and, on the other hand, it has no power to enforce their circulation, as they are to be withdrawn from circulation by a law already issued.

At Port au Prince the market is overstocked with goods, imported to avoid the extra duties which came in force on October 1.

ALL QUIET IN ST. DOMINGO.

The latest advices received from this Republic are about the 6th or 7th of October. Letters from President Bacz have been received bere in which he speaks of the tranquillity reigning over the whole country. There has been no fighting. General Cabrai is doing nothing. He has few, if any, troops with him now.
